OUR LIBERTY BELL.

The old bell rang loudly,
In the stars tower high,
While the bells shone brightly
In the heavens and the sky.

It was ringing for a cause,
On that joyful summer night
For the seven of the tower,
Rang with energy and might.

And in the crowded streets below,
Loud voices were prepared,
To shout at the signal given
"Our Independence is declared."

The bell rang on with loud applause,
Till suddenly the ringing ceased,
And our Liberty bell is nearly now
Divided into pieces.

THE NEWSPAPER BORROWER.

A mild-looking man with gold-bowed spectacles got on a car the other morning, says the Buffalo Express. And had a paper in his hand.

He took off his glasses and wiped them, as all spectacled men have to do when going from a cold to a warmer atmosphere, and was just taking his paper out to read, when a man who was sitting near him reached over and said:

"Lend me that paper will you?"

The mild looking man appeared surprised. Evidently he did not know the would-be borrower, and was a little taken aback by his nerve. He was equal to the occasion, however.

"I was going to read it myself," he said, "but as you seem to need to read newspapers more than I do, I'll lend it to you."

The borrower took it without even saying "thank you." The spectacled man leaned back with an expression of amused disgust.

"Say," he said, "would you like to have that paper sent to you regularly? If you would, I'll step into the office and pay for a year's subscription for you."

"Why, you are very kind," said the other, "I usually borrow it, but I would not object to have it given to me."

"I thought not," said the spectacled man, "by the way, have you any tickets for the theater to night?"

"No," was the reply, "I seldom go to theatres."

"I was sure of it. I'll step in and buy a couple of orchestra seats for you if you like."

"Why, I'm sure."

"Oh, don't mention it. And while I think of it, can't I order a couple of tens of dollars for you?"

"I'm about out."

"Exactly. Your grocery bill is unpaid, isn't it? I'll go around and settle it for you to night."

"I really don't understand, or—"

"No, of course you don't. But won't you accompany me to the tailor's and let me buy a new suit of clothes?"

By this time the sponger began to see the drift of the conversation.

"You're trying to buy me," he said, with a feeble attempt at a smile.

THE NEW LAMP SHADES.
They are Called "Empire," But Look More Like Tub.

The newest lamp shades look like inverted tubs. They are imported from France, along with other things Napoleonic which have deluged the markets for two years, and are called "Empire" shades.

Those which come from Paris are hand-painted, and range from one dollar to twenty in price, according to the size and the elaborateness of decoration. The largest shade is about as big as a large dishpan—od, to speak more accurately, about 24 inches in diameter at its lower edge. Its width is 15 inches, and if it were not translucent we should have a literal representation of "the light under a bushel." The material, however, is white paper, decorated in light colors and in patterns to suit the fancy of the artist.

One of the prettiest is a representation of Apollo driving the chariot of the sun over masses of fleecy clouds, with three maidens in his wake, who look as if they might represent Morning, Noon and Night. It is a pretty idea for a lamp, with the suggestion of turning night into day.

The very large shades are intended for piano lamps and the like. There are, of course, smaller sizes for the tiny Dresden ornaments that are supposed to illuminate a lady's boudoir. These to be daintily decorated with cupids and blossoms, and are very small—not more than six inches across. The same style is used for candle shades, and they look like tiny illuminated drums standing on stilts on the mantel piece or dining table.

Small Dresden lamps are the correct thing for the dinner table—one, two or three, according to the length of the table. These are trimmed with little decorated tubs and give the table quite the air of being ready for Minc.

Somebody or other's feast of a hundred years ago.

Low lamps to stand in a corner on the floor are another fad. They are about 24 inches high, chumpy, round and flat, and are made of some heavy, dark, porcelain, such as large plant jars are made of.

Amateur artists can take the opportunity offered by these shades for de-

WOMAN CHESS PLAYER.
Mrs. Showalter Will Take Part in the Coming International Match.

Mrs. Nellie Marshall Showalter, whose portrait is given herewith, is perhaps the most accomplished woman chess player in the world. She was born, says Ladies' Weekly, at Donnell Fayette county, Ky., in 1872, and is directly descended from Chief Justice Marshall, of the United States supreme court. She was educated in her native state, and in 1877 married Jackson W. Showalter, who taught her to play chess. She has played many brilliant games, and will undoubtedly achieve still higher distinction in this particular field. Mrs. Showalter is a southern belle, with a petite figure and a most charming manner. She is at present in Kentucky, but expects to come east in a few weeks for the purpose of taking part in the "International chess match by cable" which will be contested in April between the women of England and America.

THE ART OF DARNING.
It Should Be Taught as an Essential Part of Home Training.

The proper darning of a rent in cloth is an art that cannot be easily picked up and should be taught to girls as an essential part of their practical home training. The expert darning of women cloth will make a rent practically invisible by working together the torn edges, matching them as carefully as possible, and afterward pressing the cloth. A fine sewing silk is used to darn woolen cloth in preference to any darning thread, which would not be strong enough unless the thread or raveling was too coarse. Where the cloth is thick enough, endeavor to conceal the rent by darning it with a thread of the same color as the cloth.

When the cloth is thin, use a thread of a different color, and darning it with a needle of the same color as the cloth.

When the cloth is very thin, use a thread of a different color, and darning it with a needle of the same color as the cloth.

THE GREATEST FOREST.
It Stretches 3,000 Miles Long by 1,500 Miles Wide.

"Where is the greatest forest in the world?"

The question was asked in the forestry section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, at its recent annual meeting, says Youth's Companion. The importance of forests for equalizing the climate and the rainfall of the globe was under discussion, and the purpose of the question was to show where the great forest tracts of the world are situated.

One member, replying offhand, was induced to maintain that the greatest continuous tract of forest lies north of the St. Lawrence River, in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, extending northward to Hudson Bay and Labrador, a region measuring about 1,700 miles in length from east to west, and 1,000 miles in width north and south.

A professor from the Smithsonian Institution rejoined that a much larger continuous area of timber lands was to be found, reckoning from those in the State of Washington, northward through British Columbia and Alaska. But he limited his statement to North America, for he said that, in his opinion, the largest forest in the world occupied the valley of the Amazon, embracing much of northern Brazil, Eastern Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador, Colombia and Guiana; a region at least 2,100 miles in length, by 1,500 in width.

Exception was immediately taken to this statement by several members who, in the light of recent explorations, have computed the forest area of Central Africa in the valley of the Congo, including the head waters of the Nile to the northeast, and those of Zambesi on the south. According to their estimates, Central Africa contains a forest region not less than 3,000 miles in length from north to south, and a vast, although not fully known width from east to west. Discussion in which the evidence afforded by travels and surveys was freely cited, seemed favorable to the defender of the Amazonian forests.

Later in the day the entire question was placed in another light by a member who was so fortunate as to be able to speak from some knowledge of still another great forest region of the globe. This gentleman gave a vivid picture of the vast, solemn taigas and umans, the pine, larch and cedar forests of Siberia.

It appears that Siberia, from the plain of the Obi River on the west to the valley of the Indigirka on the east, embracing the great plains, or river valleys of the Yenisei, Obi, Lena and Yana Rivers, is one great timber belt, averaging more than 1,000 miles in breadth from north to south, being fully 1,700 miles wide in the Yenisei district, and having a length from east to west of not less than 4,000 versts, about 3,000 miles. Unlike equatorial forests, the trees of the Siberian taigas are mainly conifers, comprising pines of several varieties, firs and larches. In the Yenisei, Lena and Obi regions

A tall, dark-complexioned man with four days' growth of beard on his face who was hurrying along Dearborn Street the other day, suddenly halted and addressed a sleek, well-fed personage whom he encountered at a crossing.

"Bugsby," he said, "would it be convenient for you to pay that $6 that borrowed of me about a year and a half ago?"

"I'm dazed hard up this morning, nigger," responded the other. "But pay you just as soon as I can. I haven't a cent."

"I need the money."

"And you ought to have it, Jennie. I'll see that you don't go without it no longer. Good morning."

"Good morning."

Fifteen minutes later the tall, dark-complexioned man happened to pass a saloon. Looking in at the open door he saw Bugsby in the act of treating a friend.

Now Bugsby took a greenback from his pocket and tossed it carelessly on the counter. Then he stepped inside.

"Bugsby," he said, tapping him on the shoulder, "did anybody ever tell you you were a mean, sneaking, lying, nasty, dirty, contemptible, crawling, scoundrel, low-down, thieving, good-for-nothing, two-cent dead beat?"

"Why, no, Jennings," replied the well-fed personage, somewhat embarrassed.

"I don't think anybody ever did."

"Well, I'm surprised," returned the tall man, turning on his heel and striding into the evening air.

CONQUEST OF SILENCE.

From the Chicago Tribune.

Washington never made a speech the result of his fame he once uttered by, failed, and gave it up confusedly. In framing the Constitution the U. S. the labor was almost everywhere in committee of the way, which George Washington was, day, chairman, and he made but speeches during the convention of a few words each. Something like of faint speeches. The convention, never, acknowledged the master speaker as affirm that had it not been his personal popularity and the words of his first speech, pronounced the best that could be united upon legislation would have been rejected by the people. Thomas Jefferson never spoke. He couldn't do it.

Napoleon, whose executive ability almost without a parallel, said the difficulty was in finding men of substance of words. When asked to be maintained his infinite superiority in age and experience, he said, "By reserve." To a man is not measured by his speeches and the number of words he uttered.

By this time the sponger began to see the drift of the conversation.

"You're trying to buy me," he said, with a feeble attempt at a smile.

"You're trying to buy me," he said, with a feeble attempt at a smile.
